EDITORIAL

This year's chart summary has fewer pages than last year, reflecting a welcome further slowdown in the volatility of the singles chart. From 1992 to 1998 there were over a thousand new entries to the Top 75 singles every year, more than double the situation in 1985. In 2000 and 2001 this dropped to around 850 new entries, back to 1990 levels. It has been difficult to keep up with this explosion of music, especially when a record that doesn't enter the charts in the Top 10 is doomed to a very short chart existence. The way popular music has been marketed during the past decade has been an atrocious manipulation, and I long for the days when a record had a chance to climb the charts.

Talking of atrocious manipulations, something has to be said of the biggest phenomenon in popular music during 2001 and 2002: Popstars and Pop Idol. I have nothing against television talent shows, and programmes such as Opportunity Knocks and New Faces have given us the likes of Mary Hopkin, Les Dawson, Lenny Henry and Victoria Wood. That they have also given us Showaddywaddy, Black Lace and Jim Davidson, but then that is beauty of TV talent shows – you get the great and good as well as the dross. Popstars was something worse; an appalling hybrid of Big Brother and New Faces where the viewer is little more than a voyeur, and the poor applicants are stripped bare emotionally at every stage of the game. The excuse that real, lasting talent is being found and nurtured for a long career in popular music is frankly a lie: quick bucks will be made, and the poor, deluded singers will be cast aside to the bargain bins of history. This may be about to happen to Hear'Say, who have seen their singles enter at lower and lower positions in the charts.

Had I been writing this introduction twenty years ago, I wouldn't have mentioned professional songwriters. Even ten years ago, when it looked as if Rave music was dissecting the structure of a song in much the same way as painting and sculpture have been pared to the bone, professional songwriters were antiques. But the Pop Idol phenomenon has resurrected them. Rock'n'Roll, Dylan and the Beatles made the services of a songwriter redundant: artists performed their own songs. Before then, singing and writing were kept separate, though both Noel Coward and Cole Porter did perform. During the Fifties and Sixties revolution, some songwriters also took to performing, notably Carole King and Neil Diamond. And now, in 2002, I can't help feeling that the clock has been turned back. It was Pete Waterman and colleagues who changed things back in the late Eighties, when Kylie Minogue and Jason Donovan were big. It's ironic that Pete Waterman is now involved in Pop Idol. It's even more ironic that the cream of today's songwriters are Swedish, writing not only for British acts but also Americans such as Britney Spears. Can it really be that after Elvis, the Beatles, the Stones, the Kinks, the Who, Dylan, Hendrix, Bowie, Pink Floyd, the Doors, the Sex Pistols, the Clash, the Smiths, the Stone Roses, REM, Nirvana, Blur and Oasis that the real musical legacy is Guy Mitchell and ABBA? My mum probably quite likes Will Young and Gareth Gates, but then she bought Dickie Valentine and Jimmy Young records in the Fifties and gave up when the likes of Tommy Steele came along – far too noisy.

Popstars will be a passing phenomenon, though now that the BBC has started up some rival programme it not passing quickly enough for me, and there will be a new musical development that builds on the great music of the past. Very likely, all this huge musical output from the Nineties will be overhauled, forgotten gems rereleased and dragged back to the charts.
